

WOMEN'S STUDIES MINOR

Women's Studies explores the ways gender affects people's lives as it intersects with other systems of power such as race, class, and sexuality. The minor draws on interdisciplinary scholarship to promote equity and social justice while deepening students' critical thinking and analytical skills. Students take courses taught by award-winning faculty in the Department of Gender, Sexuality, and Women's Studies, and may take approved courses offered in departments across the university as electives. There are also opportunities to engage in experiential learning through internships and mentored research. The minor is open to students from across the university, including those outside the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.
